

MEET THE TEAM

Charlotte Walker

Principal Geoenvironmental
Consultant

How did you begin your career with Delta-Simons?

I started out my career as an intern in Lincoln working between the GEOPS and Sustainability teams. My internship gave me so much, including new skills and knowledge but mainly a great perspective over my degree and a refocused work ethic. So I would strongly encourage any prospective students to do a Year In Industry if possible.

What did you study at University?

I studied Environmental Science with a Year in Industry at the University of East Anglia.

How did you progress to your current position as Principal Geoenvironmental Consultant?

It's been a process of a lot of learning moments on different projects, recognising what was a success and what was difficult and building those lessons into the next project. But, most of all I'd say that I have only been able to achieve my current position because of the fantastic team that I work with who have enabled me in every way to take on responsibility, supported me through learning to take on managerial and technical skills and kept me laughing throughout it all.

What does your role involve day-to-day?

My day is usually pretty varied, where from the office I put together proposals, manage my team's future workload and plan projects, to running on-site meetings, helping the team set up at the outset of larger projects and coordinating and reviewing client deliverables. My work is normally office based now but I love an excuse to get out in the field and see the team in action and keep up to date with the evolving challenges of site work.

What do you enjoy most about working for Delta-Simons?

I love the outdoors so being able to get out of the office has always been a huge highlight to me since joining but what makes Delta-Simons special is the people. The connections we make with our colleagues and the environment that we are able to create within our teams by working closely. This also happens across the whole company and wider Lucion Group by taking part in sponsored sports events like the Cambridge Half Marathon and the C2C2C charity bike ride, bringing us all together.

What has been your career highlight?

My career highlight so far would have to be leading the team for the large scale contractual site investigation for a prestigious client over a tumultuous period of constant Covid lockdowns, tied with leading the management of our ongoing works and advising on the UK's largest logistics Site, West Midlands Interchange.
